

Yes, we were off-line for a few days!

On the way back from my vacation in Europe with my wife early December, my wallet disappeared on the flight, and with it, the usual stuff including three credit cards, driver's license and some cash. I had hoped to see the wallet returned (without the money, probably), but no sign of it since. Too bad; I had treated myself to a new one while in Florence. I thought $65 was a lot to pay for a wallet; my wife and daughter think I'm seriously out of touch with reality. They're probably right.

Obviously, I had to cancel the credit cards, and I tried to run down all the important recurring charges and switch them to new cards, but missed the company hosting the blog website! And the messages telling me the card didn't work anymore... of course, they went into the spam folder.

So, this morning I figured it all out, got the new card info entered, and we're back on-line again.
